This is probably too abrupt of an ending for a truly engaging teaser. Sure, it's shocking and exciting, but we know next to nothing about the characters or the situation, so there's little reason to care yet. Given the very short length, even for a pilot, you don't even need a teaser. This should just be the first part of ACT ONE. Not all pilots need teasers.

Why is this bold? Seems like overkill for a such a simple action. Unless it's a mistake?

Way too premature to end the act. Like in the teaser, not enough has transpired. A good ACT ONE should establish main characters (check?) AND (most importantly) the MAIN CONFLICT. What's the conflict here? There doesn't seem to be one.

You have to push further, go bolder, and do it as quickly as possible.

The cliffhanger is completely undercut here. Are we to assume the _____ was the _____ and they just got away, somehow? Because they're not mentioning it at all.

Why have the character if she's gone

Why have the character if she's gone before she becomes relevant?

[illegible][illegible]

This is essentially the same gag twice. You can probably do better here as well. What if it were reversed and Alex scared Thomas, maybe even unintentionally? Just an idea. But you should go deeper here.

You need to double check your margins here.

With some rewriting, THIS should actually be the end of ACT ONE. Most half hour shows can have scripts that go as long as 35-40 pages and typically first acts are in the 12-16 page range. Which this is right in the sweet spot of. It still hasn't formed a full conflict, but this is a good cliffhanger to end on (and it's essentially the same move you've done twice already, but one that isn't a tease).

This is another tonal switch to black comedy territory. Don't know if it suits what we've seen of the world so far.

This is another leap in logic. They're kids and this isn't quite earned. For a character to make such a decision they have to feel like they have no choice, surely they have other choices.

Again this story thread doesn't quite mesh with the glib violence and comedy. It feels like it should be in a different script. IF this was spread out of a feature length script, then maybe you could earn an argument like this. But not in such a short amount of time.

The host angle was very promising. One could assume you were going to do a "Garth Marengi's Darkplace" / parody of Goosebumps type of thing. You might consider swinging the story in that direction.

It's not clear how each episode would play out. Would it be a different story each time? Will this story continue? Where can this story go from here, given that we don't know much about the world? Find the story you want to tell, distill it and make sure everything on the page supports it.

This isn't really a closing tag, it should be part of the actual episode. Typically tags can be removed and the story would still stay intact, this is a pretty crucial change in circumstance.

If the tone is more brutal and sadistic like this, you need to keep an eye on the overall tone throughout the script.

As an example, Tales From The Crypt, of which is this very similar, may have been tongue-n-cheek BUT it had a very consistent tone throughout. Stability is more important than shock value. So in order to properly build to your "shocks" you need to have a solid base.
